CONSUL GENERAL'S HOME BEFORE THE RENOVATION

CONSUL GENERAL'S HOME AFTER THE RENOVATION

Norway, the Texas way

The Norwegian consul general's official residence in Tanglewood has been home to many foreign dignitaries over the years, but the essence of its original Texas ranch look endures despite a recent remodeling.

"We wanted to maintain the integrity of the home's original footprint and sustain Tanglewood's ranch-home theme," said Breck Powers, a principal of LBJ Construction, which undertook renovations on the 3,000-square-foot property in September.

The multimillion dollar renovations at 1024 Rocky River were completed in June, with the construction company working hand-in-hand with architect Nancy Gancucheu, principal of That's Architecture.

Consul General Elisabeth Roderburg requested a home that would be conducive to working, entertaining and raising a family.

Since settling into the renovated house, she has been pleased by the structure's versatility.

"I wanted a house that felt like a home for my family but would also represent Norway in the proper light," says Roderburg. "The end result is a place where my family can relax, I can entertain and guests can enjoy themselves."
